Stardust:

An Astrological Column for People Who Don't "Believe" in Horoscopes...

Welcome, golden October! The fact that the sun is in the sign of Libra in the zodiac is evident every year in the impressive coloring of the leaves on the trees, the warm, golden light of the sun, and the morning mists. It's simply wonderful, in my opinion. This energy captures us once again, grounding us on the earth covered in fallen leaves and strengthening the feeling of the sun in our hearts. At the top of the cosmic agenda this month are the New Moon and Full Moon, both accompanied by eclipses: New Moon in Libra on October 14 with a solar eclipse and Full Moon in Taurus on October 28 with a lunar eclipse. So, there's a lot happening, and in keeping with the Libra season, it's all about balance and equilibrium. It's about letting go and starting anew, about beginnings and endings, or conversely, about endings and beginnings. And that's precisely the feeling that accompanies us in October. We may want to start something new, but somehow, we can't quite get off the ground, as if we're still held back by something, even though our destination is in sight.

I'd like to describe this feeling from my personal perspective:

It feels like I'm on a train. I've been on this train for a while, and I've settled in comfortably. I'm just sitting there. But somehow, I know it's not the right train, that it won't take me where I belong. So, I have to change trains, leave my current train at one of the upcoming stations, and board another one to reach my destination. And as soon as I realize that I'll be changing trains soon, it suddenly feels like the train is speeding up, almost rushing, to get me to my transfer point, where I can change direction and continue on my journey with the connecting train. And in that moment, I realize that my eyes are a little moist, and this transfer is bittersweet. It's a farewell to my familiar and cozy train, but also an anticipation of the new, yet unknown train I'll soon be on, with the knowledge that it will propel me forward in my life and bring me closer to my next destination. So, I wish you a wonderful journey through this meaningful October, which will offer many opportunities to switch trains and continue your journey.

Solar Eclipse

RAMONA RUPP

Ring-shaped Solar Eclipse: The moon doesn't completely obscure the sun, leaving a ring of sunlight visible around the moon. Unfortunately, this won't be visible from Germany or in many parts of the United States. The best and longest view of the ring-shaped solar eclipse will be in Panama, for a whole 6 minutes.

Astro-Vibes

RAMONA RUPP

5.10. Mercury in Libra

Promotes respectful and loving communication with ourselves and others. Also provides good energy for reading or writing poetry and beautiful texts.

9.10. Venus in Virgo

Reliability and helpfulness in relationships gain importance. However, everyday routines may become a bit more prominent. If you're making financial investments, be sure to examine them closely and carefully.

11.10. Pluto goes direct

The time for reflection is over. Insights gained in the past few months are now ready to be implemented. It's a good time for profound changes and transformation processes.

12.10. Mars in Scorpio

Ready to pull out all the stops! Lead your inner warrior with care so that it doesn't overshoot the mark and supports you with its immense energy.

22.10./23.10. Mercury and Sun in Scorpio:

In addition to Mars, both the Sun and Mercury are now in Scorpio, making the energy very intense. It's a good time for deep and meaningful conversations. A good time for psychological discussions and change.
